Thu May 06 2010 06:00:59 PDT> Peter_Slaga : good morning
Thu May 06 2010 06:01:24 PDT> Peter_Slaga : Thursday 6 May 2010 - Desperate times Presented by Paul Donovan + National politics dictate that Germany must emphasise the nature of the Euro crisis, so as to justify their participation in the modern day Marshall Plan before the German constitutional court. Stressing the crisis seems only to feed the frenzy, however.
Thu May 06 2010 06:01:29 PDT> Peter_Slaga : + Somewhat ironically, the hope for action to combat nationalistic forces and stress pan-Euro unity rests on a man who was appointed on the basis of his nationality - the ECB's Trichet. Today's ECB meeting and press conference is an opportunity for action.
Thu May 06 2010 06:01:38 PDT> Peter_Slaga : + The ECB can justify quantitative policy measures (buying bonds from the market) if it believes that liquidity preference on the part of the banking system is rising (and it seems to be). It may not announce this today, but it probably has to hint at its readiness to adopt such measures.

Thu May 06 2010 06:01:50 PDT> Peter_Slaga : + Final opinion polls ahead of the UK election give the opposition around an 8% lead over the government, though with a larger swing in the key marginal constituencies. No poll so far has indicated a majority government. With recounts and other factors, a definite result may not be apparent before the weekend.

USDCAD breaks above 100-day MA, now eyeing its ALL IMPORTANT 200-day MA of 1.05. But 1.0455-60 stands as the 61.8% retracement of the 1.078-.9923 decline. As risk aversion eases into NY Lunch, we may see a temporary retreat in USD and JPY after which fresh rallies to emerge at around 18:00 GMT (14:00 EST). CAD shorts must be cautioned ahead of a potentially favourable jobs report from Canada, which is due (11:00 GMT Friday) 90 mins before the US report. [from Ashraf]
